

The contention of the two famous Houses,

Where I do kneele to him that slew my Father.

King. O Clifford, how thy words reuiue my soule.

Torke. Henry of Lancaster resigne thy Crowne.

What mutter you? Or what conspire you Lords?

War. Do right vnto this Princely Duke of Yorke,
Or I will fill the house with armed men,

Enter Soldiers.

And ouer the Chaire of state where now he sits,

Write vp his Title with thy vsurping blood.

King. O Warwicke, heare me speake :

Let me but reigne in quiet while I liue.

Torke. Confirme the crowne to me, and to mine heires,
And thou shalt reigne in quiet whilst thou liu'st.

King. Conuey the souldiers hence, and then I will.

War. Captaine conduct them into Tutthill fields.

Clif. What wrong is this vnto the Prince your son?

War. VWhat good is this for England and himselfe?

North. Bafe, fearfull, and despairing Henry.

Clif. How hast thou wronged both thy selfe and vs?

West. I cannot stay to heare these Articles.

Clif. Nor I, Come cosen lets go tell the Queene.

North. Be thou a prey vnto the house of Yorke,
And die in bands for this vnkindly deede.

Clif. In dreadfull war mayst thou be ouercome,
Or liue in peace abandond and despisd.

Exet. They seeke reuenge, and therefore will not yeelde my Lord.

King. Ah Exeter?

War. VWhy should you sigh my Lord?

King. Not for my selfe Lord Warwicke, but my sonne,
VWhom I vnnaturally shall disinherit.

But be it as it may. I heere intaile the Crowne

To thee and to thine heyres, conditionally,

That heere thou take an oath,

To cease these ciuill broyles, and whilst I liue

To honor me as thy King and Soueraigne.

Tork. That oath I willingly take, and will performe.

of Yorke and Lancaster.

War. Long liue King Henry. Plantagenet

King. And long liue thou, and all thy for

Torke. Now Yorke and Lancaster are rec

Exet. Accurst be he that seekes to make

Sound Trumpets.

Torke. My Lord, Ile take my leaue,
For Ile to Wakefield, to my Castle.

Exit Torke

War. And ile keepe London with my sou

Norf. And ile to Norfolke with my follo

Mont. and I to the sea from whence I ca

Enter the Queene and the P

Exet. My Lord, heere comes the Queene

King. And so will I.

Queene. Nay, stay, or else Ile follow thee.

King. Be patient gentle Queene, and then

Queen. What patience can there be? ah

Thou hast vndone thy selfe, thy sonne, and

and giuen our rights vnto the house of Yor

art thou a King, and wilt be for'cst to yeeld

Had I bene there, the souldiers should hau

Me on their launces points, before I would

Granted to their wils. The Duke is made

Protector of the Land: Sterne Fauconbric

Commands the narrow seas: and thinkst t

To sleepe secure? I heere diuorce me Hen

From thy bed, vntill that acte of Parliame

Be recald, wherein thou yeeldest to the ho

The Northerne Lords that haue forsworne

Will follow mine, if once they see them spr

and spread they shall vnto thy deepe disgr

Come sonne, lets away, and leaue him hee

King. Stay gentle Margaret, and heare m

Q. Thou hast spoke too much already,

King. Gentle sonne Edward, wilt thou st

Queen. I, to be murdered by his enemie